

Gentlemen:

I urge you to oppose pending changes to how the various communications media can consolidate. I believe those changes will not be in the public interest in allowing a few mega companies to control how and what information we are given via television, radio and print. I fear that approval of these changes would lead to a single voice, instead of the diversity that has been the hallmark of the American culture. Sincerely, Robert T. Renfro, Senior Lecturer-Retired, the University of Texas at Austin
